AMUSEMENTS |

Those who fail to hear the Royal Hawaiian band—and few Salt Lakers will fail to hear it—will never know the possibilities of a band organization. Here is a band that contains within its membership of more than sixty men a military band of the highest quality, a glee club, an orchestra, a mandolin club. And whether the brass was crashing through one of Sousa's marches, whether the glee club was singing one of the langourous, soft airs of the islands or the orchestra was playing a lively two-step, the music was the very best of its kind. It is no risk to recommend the Royal Hawaiian band to the attention of this public. It would be an unkindness not to recommend it—an unkindness to the public.

The first concert at Saltair, where the band is to play an engagement of a week, was given in the pavilion yesterday afternoon. The music was a revelation to the listeners. Few in the audience had believed that such a "concord of sweet sounds" was possible. The band was not a band at all; it was one great instrument played by a great musician, Herr Captain Berger, director. As the captain waved his baton the music of the first number, Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever," seemed to flow from it, to rise and fall with it.

There is neither the time nor the inclination to give a critical review of the afternoon and evening programmes. It is with the names of Sousa, of Gilmore and of other great bandmasters who have been heard in the United States must be linked the name of Berger, and Berger's name of any of the others. The German-Hawaiian-American is a master. So much—and it is not enough—for the band as we have come to understand the meaning of the word.

as we have come to understand the meaning of the word.

Now add the glee club, the mandolin club, the orchestra and half a dozen splendid vocal soloists. For the first time anywhere in the United States an assembly of Americans danced last night to music by a Hawaiian orchestra. It was the sort of music that sets one's feet to preview in a but of the sort to the medical state of the sort of the sort to the sort of the sort to the sort of the sort moving involuntarily, the sort that makes the old feel young again, that makes one want to dance in spite of one's self. "Jesse James" is the offering at the Grand the first half of this week by the Ethel Tucker stock company. The play, as its name indicates, is a melodrama of the old-fashioned, thrilling sort. Some of the scenes in the life of the desperado are portrayed, but not, as some people may imagine, in an offensive manner. The parts are all in capable hands, and the engagement promises to be a prosperous one. "Jesse James" will be seen at the Grand again tonight, tomorrow night and at a matinee tomorrow.
